Contributors

MASAKO INO is associate professor of American studies at Tsuda College, Tokyo. After she had graduated from Tsuda College as an American studies major, she received a Fulbright fellowship for her graduate work at Syracuse University. Recently she has been visiting associate professor at McGill University. Ino has published a number of articles on U.S.- and Canadian-Japanese diplomacy over the immigration question and on ethnic Japanese in North America. She co-authored Esunikku Amerika [Ethnic America] (1984), an ethnic history of the United States and co-translated several books, such as East to America, JACL, Beyond the Melting Pot, and The Cycles of American History.

YOKO MURAKAWA is research associate at the Institute of International Relations, Tsuda College, Tokyo. She received her undergraduate and graduate education both at Tsuda College. A specialist in the history of U.S.-Japanese relations, particularly of Japanese emigration/immigration, Murakawa has published several articles on emigrants from Ehime and their life in America. In 1987, she published Amerika no kaze ga fuita mura [A Village Where an American Wind Was Blowing].

YUZO MURAYAMA is full-time lecturer of economics at Kansai University of Foreign Studies, Osaka. He studied economics, particularly economic history, at Doshisha University and University of Washington, and received a Ph.D. from the latter in 1982. He worked at Nomura Research Institute several years before accepting the present teaching position. His publications include Amerika ni ikita Nihonjin imin [Japanese Immigrants in America] (1989) and “Contractors, Collusion, and Competition: Japanese Immigrant Laborers in the Pacific Northwest, 1898–1911,” Explorations in Economic History, Vol. 21 (1984).
MASAKO NOTOJI is associate professor of American cultures at Musashi University, Tokyo. She graduated from University of Tokyo, majoring in American studies, and received two master’s degrees from UCLA, one in Asian American studies (1980) and another in anthropology (1982). With major research interests in the processes of cultural relations, she published a number of articles which include “Disney in the 1930s: The Genesis of an American National Cult” and “Civilization Illuminating the World: the Unites States and Japan at the World’s Columbian Exposition of 1893.” Her latest publication is an essay in Gendai Amerikazō no saikōchiku [Reinterpretations of Modern America] (1990). She also co-translated Robert Kelley’s The Cultural Pattern in American Politics.

---

This Journal’s Policy of Romanizing Japanese Names and Words

In this journal all the Japanese personal names are written in the order of a given name first and a family name second. Since many Japanese are internationally known by their names in this order, it was feared that it might cause confusion if Japanese names were written in the family name-given name sequence.

For personal and geographical names, long vowels of ō and ū are indicated with some exceptions. In the case of such internationally known places as Tokyo and Kyoto, long vowels ō and ū are romanized simply as o and u. Other exceptions are names of present-day Japanese scholars and authors. Their names are romanized without indication of long vowels in accordance with the practice of this association.

Japanese institutions, such as Ōkurashō (Ministry of Finance) and Keiō Gijuku Daigaku (Keio University), appear in their English names in the text of the journal. When their Japanese names are romanized in footnote citations, ō and ū are used to indicate long vowels.

The Library of Congress (USA) method is followed as far as practicable in romanizing the titles of books and articles and the names of periodicals.